

Simson has set off Simson has set off ... on the road ...

Many years ago - it was 2011 - an animal rights activist discovered a pack of young and shy dogs and handed them over to the animal shelter as a safe haven: Simson, Aiko, Flori and Didi. Didi, Flori and Simson still live at the shelter today.

All the dogs were initially very shy and skittish. They were not really suitable for adoption. They didn't want to live in kennels either. So they were taken into the shelter as free-roaming guests and formed a harmonious and peaceful pack, sometimes approaching people to get a treat first and foremost.

Simson has now decided to make his way to Rainbow Land and has gently fallen asleep. He had a nice and safe life with his humans there at the shelter, it was the life he was used to.

Rest gently and in peace, dear Simson, and keep us in your memory!

Donut has now decided to take Simson's place in the free-roaming pack:
